Mr. Barack Obama
The President
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. President:

We, the undersigned religious, civil rights, labor, health, women's, and other organizations, write to remind you of the upcoming seventieth anniversary of Executive Order 8802, which was the first executive order prohibiting government contractors from engaging in employment discrimination. In honor of this anniversary, we urge you to fully restore this civil rights protection by rescinding the language in Executive Order 13279 that permits religious organizations that contract with the government to discriminate against federally funded employees on the basis of religion.

Many of the undersigned organizations are members of the Coalition Against Religious Discrimination (CARD), which is a broad and diverse coalition formed in the mid-1990s to oppose legislative and regulatory efforts that eliminate the traditional safeguards that protect civil rights and religious liberty when government partners with faith-based organizations.

One of these traditional safeguards is the guarantee that otherwise qualified people are not disqualified from federally funded jobs because of their religion. This safeguard was first put in place by President Franklin D. Roosevelt when he signed Executive Order 8802 on June 25, 1941. The executive order prohibited employment discrimination by defense contractors based on "race, creed, color, or national origin." This was the first action taken by the government to promote equal opportunity for all Americans, and the start of our longstanding, national commitment to barring even private organizations from discriminating in hiring using federal funds.

In subsequent executive orders, Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, and Johnson expanded the protections. Indeed, Executive Order 11246, signed by President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1965, prohibits discrimination in all government contracts.² These executive orders led to the enactment of scores of civil rights statutes that prohibit discrimination, especially by recipients of federal funds.

Yet, in 2002, President George W. Bush rolled back these traditional safeguards and core civil rights protections for applicants for some government-funded jobs.³ Executive Order 13279, exempts religious organizations that receive government contracts from the requirements of Executive Order 11246 and allows them to discriminate in hiring based on religion. This civil rights rollback remains in place today.

We ask, therefore, that you take this opportunity to celebrate this civil rights landmark anniversary by restoring Executive Order 11246 to its original form, reinstating the anti-discrimination provision for all organizations. The traditional safeguard protecting against discrimination in government-funded jobs is particularly critical in government contracts. The government, in purchasing necessary goods and services for its own use, must not fund discrimination.⁴ President John F. Kennedy explained the importance of guaranteeing equal opportunity in government contracts: "[I]t is the plain and positive obligation of the United States Government to promote and ensure equal opportunity for all qualified persons, without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin, employed or seeking employment . . . on government contracts. . . ."⁵ From 1941 until 2002 this had been the law of the land. And since 1941, our values have reflected a strong commitment to ensuring that no one is disqualified from government-funded jobs because of his or her religion.

Restoring Executive Order 11246 for all government contractors would be an important first step toward fulfilling the campaign promise you made on July 1, 2008, in Zanesville, Ohio. In that speech you stated that you would reform the Faith-Based Initiative so that "if you get a federal grant, you can't use that grant money to proselytize to the people you help and you can't discriminate against them – or against the people you hire – on the basis of their religion." Yet, even though officials from your administration have said that the issue is being reviewed by the Justice Department⁶ and have expressed a commitment to ensuring that partnerships with religious organizations are consistent with our law and values, we have seen no forward movement on this issue.⁷

Accordingly, we urge you to honor this anniversary by rescinding Executive Order 13279's amendment of Executive Order 11246 that exempted religious organizations that contract with the government from the prohibition against employment discrimination on the basis of religion. This would restore key civil rights protections that were first established seventy years ago and is consistent with our nation's values.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW AND WITHDRAWAL OF JUNE 29, 2007 OFFICE OF LEGAL COUNSEL MEMORANDUM RE: RFRA

September 17, 2009

The Honorable Eric H. Holder, Jr. Attorney General of the United States United States Department of Justice 950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW Washington, DC 20530-0001

Dear Mr. Attorney General:

The undersigned religious, education, civil rights, labor, and health organizations are committed to protecting religious liberty, and working to do so at all levels of the government. We write today to request that you direct the Office of Legal Counsel ("OLC") to review and withdraw its June 29, 2007 Memorandum ("OLC Memo"). The OLC Memo's interpretation that the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993² ("RFRA") provides for a blanket override of statutory nondiscrimination provisions is erroneous and threatens core civil rights and religious freedom protections.

Some of us were leaders in the Coalition for the Free Exercise of Religion, which led the effort to persuade Congress to enact remedial legislation after the United States Supreme Court sharply curtailed Free Exercise Clause protections in Employment Div. v. Smith in 1990.³ This effort culminated in 1993, when then-President William J. Clinton signed RFRA into law.⁴ In essence, RFRA was intended to provide robust protection of free exercise rights, restoring a standard of strict scrutiny to federal laws that substantially burden religion.⁵

Many of us also are members of the Coalition Against Religious Discrimination (CARD), which formed in the mid-1990s specifically to oppose insertion of the legislative proposal commonly known as "charitable choice" into authorizing legislation for federal social service programs. Upon taking office, the Bush Administration sought to impose "charitable choice" on nearly every federal social service program. Stymied in its legislative efforts to do so, 6 the Administration instead issued Executive Orders and federal regulations to allow religious

⁵ Although RFRA, as enacted, reached both federal and state law, the Court held in City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997), that application of RFRA to state and local laws was unconstitutional. The Boerne decision, however, did not render RFRA per se unconstitutional and subsequent cases demonstrate that, as applied to the federal government, RFRA remains good law. See Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficente Uniao do Vegetal et al., 546 U.S. 418, 424 (2006).

⁶ In 2001, the Bush Administration strongly promoted legislation (H.R. 7) which would have expanded "charitable choice" to nearly all federal social service programs. The measure failed in Congress, in large part, because of the civil rights and religious liberty concerns CARD raised.

The Honorable Eric H. Holder, Jr. September 17, 2009 Page Two organizations to participate directly in federal grant programs without the traditional safeguards that protect civil rights and religious liberty.

Not all statutory provisions barring religious discrimination in the workplace could be obviated by Executive Order,⁷ and the Bush Administration's attempts to repeal them in Congress were repeatedly rejected. Failing in its attempts to repeal these laws in Congress, the Administration then developed and promoted the far-fetched assertion, memorialized in the OLC Memo, that RFRA provides religious organizations a blanket exemption to these binding anti-discrimination laws.

The OLC Memo wrongly asserts that RFRA is "reasonably construed" to require that a federal agency categorically exempt a religious organization from an explicit federal nondiscrimination provision tied to a grant program. Although the OLC Memo's conclusion is focused on one Justice Department program, its overly-broad and questionable interpretation of RFRA has been cited by other Federal agencies and extended to other programs and grants. The guidance in the OLC Memo is not justified under applicable legal standards and threatens to tilt policy toward an unwarranted end that would damage civil rights and religious liberty.

When President Barack Obama issued Executive Order 13498, amending former President George W. Bush's Executive Order 13199 (Establishment of White House Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives), he underlined the importance of ensuring that partnerships between government and faith-based institutions can be created and maintained effectively while "preserving our fundamental constitutional commitments." The OLC Memo, however, stands as one of the most notable examples of the Bush Administration's attempt to impose a constitutionally questionable and unwise policy—RFRA should not be interpreted or employed as a tool for broadly overriding statutory protections against religious discrimination or to create a broad free exercise right to receive government grants without complying with applicable regulations that protect taxpayers.

We accordingly request that the Obama Administration publicly announce its intention to review the OLC Memo, and that at the end of that review, withdraw the OLC Memo and expressly disavow its erroneous interpretation of RFRA, the most significant free exercise protection of the post-Smith era.

Thank you in advance for your consideration of our views.

Respectfully,
